A suspect is guilty of intimidation, harassment, or retaliation of a participant in the legal process by threatening, attempting to influence testimony, or hindering prosecution efforts with the participant. If convicted of a felony crime, the defendant can be incarcerated for one calendar year or more, depending upon the severity of the means used to intimidate, harass, or retaliate. The Court may order the defendant to refrain from further intimidation, harassment, or retaliation as part of any judgment. RETURN OF PROPERTY:

The Murray State Police will return promptly a victim's property held for evidentiary purposes unless there is a compelling reason for retaining it.

NOTIFICATION OF EMPLOYERS:

The Murray State Police will, upon request of the victim or witness, assist in informing employers of the need for victim or witness cooperation in the prosecution of the case and that such cooperation may necessitate absences from work.
